Many of His Adherents Besert Him to Fight Under the Government Banner-Whether the Government Has Won or Lost Cannot Yet be Answered Positively-Results of the Returns Thus Far at Hand.

BERLIS, June 18. - The returns have almost ceased to come in, although reports from thirty districts are still lacking. At midnight the Army bill parties and groups had 83 scals; the opposition parties, 85. All depends upon i the second ballots.

The Government has decided to exert all its influence to induce all the factions favorable to the bill to upite against the Eichterists. Borial Demograts, and Clericals in the byelections, which will be held about one week from to-morrow, record ballots will be necsary, it is estimated, in almost 200 districts,

The returns received so far have not been complete enough to render possible accurate predictions of the result. Of the in districts from which all the figures bearing on the second ballot have been received, it appears certale that the Chericals will win 25, the Social Demograts 2, the National Liberals, Conservatives, and Agracians C and the Particularists The Radical Unionists are expected to gain several more seats.

The National laberals, according to the latest reports, are likely to return to Berlin with approximately their o d delegation of forty. The Opposition Circleals, under Dr. Liever, have retained virtually all their old constituencies, as far as can be ascertained, and will return to Perlin proposely with hearly itt

The Government Cherleat-Agrarian movement, under Fremer: you behorlemer-Aist and Freiherr von Huene, bas shown few evidences of success.

Nine Independent Cori als have been elected, but of this number only five are declared advocates of the Army bill.
Conservatives and Free Conservatives, as was expected, are suffering no losses. They will enter the itelehistag with about 85 seats The Social Lemon ats are still triumphant at the expense of the lifetier madeals. of the National Liberals, Pres Conservatives, and the Conservatives make a landing earted in all close districts they will be able to raily fully 175 votes for the Government at the opening of the Reich dag. Both Chancellor von Caprivi and Count Dotho au Eulenberg, Prussian Minister President, have been roused from their apathy, and will set the bureaueratic machinery of the Government in operation to this end.

Benus, June 17.- Reports from all parts of the empire continue to give evidence of the cellapse of Lugen Richter's Radical party. The South German Democrats, with who the Richterists joined hands at the or ening of the campaign to light more effectively against the Army bill at the polis, have secured five scats, one of them won from the National Liberals, and are likely to enter the next Beichstag with their delegation increased from ten to fourteen or fifteen. At 6 o'clock this morn-ing, however, not a despatch had been receited to indicate that the Elehterists had carried a constituency on the first bailot.

This failure of the Richterists is due partly to the fact that the ladicats who descried Richter to make a government campaign under the lanner of the Eadleal Union, were the cream of the old party. Excepting Virehow, hardly a conspicuous Populy stood by Richter after the dissolution of the Heichstag. Hickort. Broemel, Hinze, Earth, editor of the Nation: Siemens, and Haenel, descried at once to the Government. The dissidents are known to have elected one Deputy, and to have the best chances of electing seven or eight more on the second ballet. The Richterists. who constituted two-thirds of the Parliamentary party of sixty-seven, will bring probably few more than twenty-five members into the next Relebstag. This state of affairs is distinetly favorable to the Government, as the loss of the Radical opposition is expected to more than counterbalance the gains of the Eocial Democratic opposition.

The Anti-Semites are now believed to be in a way to secure twelve seats. Ablwardt and Boeckel, the most Liatant members of the last Parliamentary group, have already been re turned. The aggregate vote of the Anti-Semiter has increased amazingly since 1890.

The National Liberals are likely to return to Berlin with approximately their old delegation of forty. The opposition Clericals, under Dr Lieber, have retained virtually all their old constituencies, as for as can be ascertained. The Government Clerical-Agrarian movement, under Freiherr von Schorlemer-Alst and Freiherr von Huene, has shown no evidence of success. The Conservatives and Free Conservatives, as was expected, are suffering no losses. The Social Democrats are still triumphing at the expense of the Richter Radi-

In general the advantages gained by the Government are to be found in the prospect that some ten Radical Unionists, who voted against the Army bill, and who now favor it. have good prospects of sitting in the next Beichstag, and that the Anti-Semitic representation, partially favorable to the Government, bids fair to be greatly increased. As the candidates whose elections have been reportad number but few more than one hundred however, the question whether the Government won or lost by the dissolution cannot rebe answered positively. The present conclusive returns from constituencies carried by the large parties show that the Conservatives and Free Conservaties have secured 27 seats Clericals 27, Social Democrats 23, National Liberals 7; the Poles have 9 seats, the South German Democrats 5.

Bentin, June 17,-lieturns from 348 of the districts in which elections for members of the Beichstag were held on Thursday, re-ceived up to 5 o'clock this evening, show the slection of forty-nine Centrists, thirty-seven Conservatives, twenty-four Social Democrats, seventeen National Liberals, nine Centrists in favor of the bill, three Rickertist Volkspartel, thirteen Poles, six Alsatians, three anti-Semites, and three Welde, with '180 reballots necessary. No litchterists have yet been elected. An analysis of the roballots shows that the tocial Democrats and National Liberals will figure chiefly in them, with the Richterists and Centrists a long way behind.

The defeat of the lighterists appears to be irretrievable. Their organs admit the crushing character of the disaster, but the Berlin Freising Perinag flads comfort in pre-dicting that the ultimate poll of the party combined with the Volkspartel, Centrists, and Socialists will form an overwhelming plebiselte against the Army bill and the Huene compromise. It is certain that if the plebiscite were to decide the fate of the Government. the enormous Socialist vote already cast would determine that. But the Army bill will depend upon flual party combinations, regarding which it is still hazardous to attempt to form any definitive conclusion.

Herr Eichter bimself says it is doubtful whether a majority against the bill can yet be inferred from the ascertained results. In calculating what accession of strength the Socialists will gain in the Reichstar the fact must be remembered that the whole force of the party has always hitherto been policel on the first ballot, whereas other parties, through anti-Socialist coalitions, show the greatest strength on rebailot. It was thus in 1800, when the Freisinnige party won in all thirty-live of the reballots between them and the Socialists. About elebry Socialists will stand in the coming reballots, and it is a rational estimate to credit them with securing twenty-six more scats. Before the elections Herr Vollmar, one of the sanest heads of the party, predicted that fifty of his colleagues would appear in the new Reichstan

What ought to concern the Government quite as much as the increase of the Socialists in Parliament is the development of socialism throughout the country. Chancellor von Ca-privi held conferences with the Emperor on Thursday and again last ovening, reporting to his Majesty the character of the returns. It is rather significant that the semi-official organs to-day recur to suggestions as to how to curb the popular vote.

Regarding the Centrists, the recent schisms

the negating the Centrists, the recent schisms do not appear likely to seriously affect their strength. The party may lose fitteen seats and still remain the most solid party in the house. If after the rebailet the Centrists in favor of the bill appear fifteen strong it will not greatly affect the fighting power of the main section of the party. Both the Conservatives and National Liberals are coming out better than it was expected they would, both having to fight numerous resulted and their common enemy. The National Liberals have the best chance in the rich manufacturing districts like Eiberfeld, liarmen. Mannheim, Darmstadt, and Bochum, where they succeeded in pulling their candidates through to a rebailot.

The Socialist leaders purposed issuing directions giving minute instructions as to how the members of the party should vote on the rebailot, but decided to-day that broad moral principles alone should guide them in their tacties. If the candidates of the party who stand in the rebailots plugge themselves to resist attacks upon popular suffrage and to oppose an increase of the taxation affecting the masses, the Secialists may yet for or against them, or, if they see fit abstant from young.

masses, the Socialists may vote for or against hem, or, if they see fit, abstain from voting. The Socialista in Vienna will make a demon-stration in celebration of the success of their lowers in retherm.

German brethren.

The Austrian official papers hold that the results of the election are alarming. The Deutsche Zeitung says: "Germany can only be saved by a strong hand. It is time that Caprivi should show that the future of Germany s safe in his care.

TRIED SUICIDE TWICE IN A MINUTE AT THE GRAND CENTRAL.

Laid His Neck on the Rail Before the En-gine, and When the Engine Took a Flying Switch He Put Down His Head Again. Switchman Guy Vannoy, who was working in the east side of the yard of the New York Central Railroad, near Forty-sixth street, about 6 'clock last evening, saw a short, slight man who had no business there standing among the tracks and looking up them as if at a down train. Vannoy shouted to him to get out of the yard. The man did not move. The switchman was unable to leave his post at the time, but he

Just then engine 80, bringing in the White Plains local, Harlem division, came in eight. The waiting man ran up the track toward the engine and deliberately lay down next the track, with his neck across the east rail. But he engine took the usual flying switch and went off on another track.

Apparently thinking that the train would follow it the man acrambled to his feet again. In a minute he spied the cars of the White Plains local coming slowly along the first rack, free of the engine. Down he went with his neck on the rall again.

Vannor was shouting, and the brakeman on the front platform of the first car spied the man and yelled at him, at the same time clapping on the hand brake as hard as he could.

It was too late. Both trucks of the first car, which was a baggage car, and the first truck of the second car passed over the man, almost cutting his head off. Several switchmen of the second car passed over the man, almost cutting his head off. Several switchmen rushed up after the train had stopped, and some of the passengers got out of the train. The police brought a stretcher and carried the remains to the station house in the building. The dead man was apparently about 35 years of age, of fair complexion, and with short dark hair. He had a short sandy moustache and wore a dark blue check cont and vest, black and brown striped tronsers, an outing shirt, but no undereighting save a short, thin shirt. His shoes were laced, and he wore white socks and a Derby hat.

On the right side of his head, just behind the ear, was a wound which had not been dressed more than three or four hours. The hair was shaved lose around it. There was nothing in his peckets but a valies key, complimentary ladge No. 852 of the Hudson County Jockey Club, and a scrap of paper on which was pencilled Policy 23,054. Some hospital or dispersary may identify him.

Among the growd which gathered around the temains just after the accident were a number of people from the street. One of these, who is described as a tall man with a brack beard, looked at the hody and is said by Station Master Richard Slater, who was also present, to have remarked:

"Why, that's the man that jumped from the Perty-sixth street bridge his afternoon."

The man went away then and was not seen again. Nebody could be found in or out of the yard who had heard of a man jumping from the bridge in the afternoon.

In the early part of April the Trow Company became illumeially embarrassed owing to the failure of the United States Beek Company to pay a claim of $100,000. The claim was not disputed, but the Beek Company was unable to meet it. On April 20 the Directors of the Trow Company held a meeting and adopted a resolution to negotiate a loan of not more than $100,000 to tide over the difficulties.

As this could not be done without the consent of 160 per cent, of the preferred stock, according to the by-laws, circular letters were sent to the holders of the preferred stock, asking their consent, and notifying them that a meeting of the stockholders would to hely yesterday to determine the matter. The circular letter was signed by B. W. Smith, President; Franklin W. Hopkins, Treasurer, and William H. Bates, Secretary. It explained the necessity for the proposed action.

The company was solvent, but unable to meet its obligations because of the United States Book Company similare to settle. The Trow to ompany's indebtedness was $145,000, and the Book Company owed it $190,000, which the directors considered a good asset. The stockholders consented to the meeting, and it was called for yesterday. Some different arrangement must have been made, however, for a few days and each stockholder received a copy of this circular letter:

lionaire's will. Justice Vann says: "The plaintiffs claim that an equitable right exists in their favor, because the executors hold the personal estate in trust for the benefit of the next of kin, and that they, as benefit of the next of kin, and that they, as the next of kin, are the beneficiaries of the trust.

"They argue that as a court of easity is the peculiar forme tor the administration of trusts, they have a right to ask that the instrument creating the trust be construct and that proper instructions be given to the trustees. If there is any doubt arising out of the will itself that requires construction, it has not been pointed out. The language of the teather, as used in the paragraph in question, is clear and his meaning obvious. In that paragraph he rays:

"It these views are correct the plaintiffs have mistaken their remedy by coming into a court of equity instead of waiting until their legacy is due, and then sating for it or applying to the Surrogate's Court for relief."

The decision is regarded as a decided advantage to Baby Dorothea over the kinspeople of Mr. Crouse, who waited to force a revelation at the outset.

Hiram R. Steele of Steele & Dickson of this city, counsel for Mrs. Sieghert Kosterlitz and her daughter, Dorothea Lidgarda Crouse Wilson, the alieged heir of David Edgar Crouse, said last night that the action had been brought against his clients by George N. Crouse and about twenty other cousins of the late millionaire to have the court construct the will, Mr. Crouse left about $500,000 in special hoquests. The rest of his property he left, to quote from the will, "to my next of kin, as if had died intestate." The will was probated without opposition on Feb. 1, 1843. A clause in it provided that no distribution of the estate should be made until a year after the will was probated. The blaintiffs said they had heard that Mrs. Kosteritz, on behalf of her daughter and certain other recopie, had claimed the property on the grounds that they were the next of kin.

They stated that the deceased had left neither wife, parents, grandparents, brother nor sister, and asked the Court to declare who was the next of kin.

and asked the Court to declare who was the next of kin.

Steele & Dickson, on behalf of their clients, demurred to the complaint, saving that the plaintiffs had not asked for relief, and that if they had the court could not have given them any relief.

The decision simply leaves the whole matter where it stood before the action was brought. Mr. Steele said that at the proper time he would put in a claim for the residuary estate on behalf of his clients.
